The Camp Store

You get a text message from a number you don't recognize. The text message says, "Hello Youbie, your YoubieFashion package is waiting for you to update your delivery preferences. Click the link to enter your address within 12 hours. <http://uhOh.NotYoubieFashion>." You haven't bought anything from YoubieFashion recently.

Discussion:

- WHO is really sending me this message? I don't know who is sending me the message. I think it's a scammer because I haven't bought anything from YoubieFashion recently.
- WHAT do they want me to do? They want me to click on a link and add my address.
- WHY are they asking me to do it? I don't know why they want me to click on the link. Maybe the link will install malware on my device.

The Game Room

You're playing YoubieCreate, a popular world-building game, and another player sends you a message with a link for free power-ups. When you click, it takes you to a new site that asks you for your date of birth.

Discussion:

- WHO is really sending me this message? The other player is sending me the message.
- WHAT do they want me to do? They want me to enter my date of birth on a website I don't know.
- WHY are they asking me to do it? I don't know why they want me to add my date of birth. Maybe the other player is trying to get my information to get into my accounts.

The Canoe Rental

You're on your tablet playing YoubieBoat, an ocean exploration game. You get a pop-up offering you extra "fuel" to make it to the next island. You double click, and it works! You got them, and you get there. But your parents tell you that their credit card was charged, and they didn't give permission for these charges.

Discussion:

- WHO is really sending me this message? I'm not sure who the pop-up is from. Maybe YoubieBoat or maybe another company.
- WHAT do they want me to do? They want me to click on a pop-up.
- WHY are they asking me to do it? They're asking me to click on the pop-up so they can charge my parents' credit card.
