The Claud has descended on Youville's thrift shop, creating chaos and confusion in the sorting room.

For each scenario, ask the questions below. Then write your response explaining why you would or wouldn't share.

- DO I know and trust the people I'm thinking of sharing this with?
- HOW might this message make other people feel?
- HOW will I feel if my message ends up somewhere I didn't mean for it to be?
- COULD what I'm about to share make someone feel bad, ruin a friendship, harm someone's reputation, or put someone in danger, including myself?

Once you've figured out what's okay to share, the thrift shop is secure from The Claud.

1 It's the first day of school. You snap a photo in front of your house that has your house number in it. You think of texting it to your grandparents.

2 Your best friend asks you to take a screenshot of a conversation you've had with someone else and send it to them.

3 After an argument with someone you think of as a friend, you look through embarrassing videos you have of that person and think about posting one online.

4 Your dad is a good cook, and he makes a top secret new dish for an upcoming competition. You want to share a picture of it in your friend's group chat.

5

Someone in your group chat writes something mean and untrue about a friend you know who's not in the chat. You want to send a screenshot of the message to a group chat that includes that friend.

6

You've just been added to the chat for a new friend group. You're thinking of sharing a funny photo of a close friend who's not in the group.

7

You're at the aquarium. Your mom is on the way to pick you up, but she's stuck in traffic. You think about sharing your location with her so she can see where you are.
